I . Course Overview

1. Course Description

Globalization has many disparate and conflicting meanings and consequences, both positive and negative, for many different people. However one views it, its effects are pervasive. You can love McDonalds in Childe, China, Canada, and Costa Rica. All countries in the world participate in the United Nations, as well as international and national non-governmental organizations from all over the world. Credit cards, no matter what country they are distributed or used in, are all the same width, thickness, depth, and length. Globalization is economic, political, and cultural.

The general goal of this course is to demonstrate that globalization is: significant, complex, and contentious. After introducing some key issues in the study of globalization, the course examines political, economic, cultural, and environmental globalization. Through each of these sections of the course, we will ask how globalization is experienced and how it is explained.
